First and Third Acts Are Picturesque and Tuneful-Second One Is Weak.

"Her Little Highness," a new three-net musical comedy, music by Reginald De Koven, book and lyrics by Channing Polock and Rennold Welf, had its first performance in this city last night, and won what looks like a genuine success, notwithstanding the handicap of a nondescript second act, which offered the composer practically no opportunity to add to the number of genuinely musical songs in his score. COLUMBIA SHOW PLEASES. There was a crowded house at the Columbia last night to greet James E.

(Blutch) Cooper and his "Beauty, Youth and Folly" company in the two-net sketch called the "Blue Rose." Tom McRae, as Smoke, the eccentric porter, furnished most of the funmaking, and the others in the cast seconded his efforts in good style, his trouble with the spot light, in the second act, being one of the hits of the evening. The chorus was well drilled, sang with vigor, danced with grace, and had some pretty costumes. Lottie Blackford, as Ima Simp, carrying off the burlesque honors. There are several spots where the show might be improved, but as a whole it gives a pleasing evening's "Lena Rivers," with Priscilla Knowles entertainment.
